one in four adults (23%) say the place "in their heart" they consider home isn't where they are living now. That report also cited Census data indicating that Americans are changing residences less often than they used to: Only 11.9% moved between 2007 and 2008, the lowest share since the government began tracking this measure in the late 1940s.

Seattle is the sixth most popular destination for movers, according to a survey by moving coordination service Relocation.com of New York. Las Vegas is the top destination for people making a state-to-state move. WHAT ARE CLIENTS HAVE TO SAY

Dear Steve,

We would like to thank you for the top-notch service you provided as our selling agent. You were responsive, timely, informative, friendly, very accessible, and very hands-on.

You convinced us in just one meeting that we should choose you as our agent, and you were right! Our entire experience was seamless (for us, anyway!) and very easy.

You offered us great tips on little things we could do to improve the marketability of our home, and our house looked stunning while it was on the market, in large part due to your diligence in keeping it up while we were away. We were very impressed by the compelling and comprehensive flyer you created for our home, and the beautiful pictures you posted online.

Ultimately, our home sold for $20k more than the asking price, and you negotiated a fantastic deal. You kept our best interests at heart through the whole process, while also remaining fair to the buyers and potential buyers. We will attest that you have great integrity and reliability, in addition to being a terrific salesman!

We also really appreciated your offer to assist us with any of the closing documents on our new home (which we were purchasing through my late grandmother's trust, and therefore, didn't have an agent for), at no additional cost. This offer exemplifies the high-touch service you provide to your clients.

Thank you again for all of your successful efforts. We will be sure to recommend you to all of our friends and family, and will definitely use you again in the future if/when we are buying or selling a home!

Warmest regards,
Michael and Jessica McFarlane

STATE OF THE CITY 2009 SEATTLE MAYOR GREG NICKELS

THE FOLLOWING ARE SOME EXCERPTS FROM THE MAYORS "STATE OF THE CITY 2009" SPEECH.

Wise investments

Consider some of the things that give us cause for optimism: Our crime rate is the lowest in 40 years. Violent crime is down again this year, and the number of property crimes in 2008 was less than it was in 1967.

Transit ridership is at record levels. Recycling participation is at an all-time high. Our libraries are the busiest they have ever been. We're attracting more artists, musicians and movie-makers – We gave permits last year to 365 film productions – including 15 feature films –to shoot in Seattle, the most in a decade.

No doubt, our city budget will face more challenges in the coming months. But working together with the City Council, we will make wise decisions. This is not the first time we've faced tough times.

to build a new park. Northgate is fulfilling its destiny as a great urban center. Later this spring, Amazon.com will move forward with the latest phase of its headquarters complex. In July, the Gates Foundation broke ground for a $500 million campus that will make Seattle a center of global health and philanthropy.

The path forward: Creating jobs and opportunities for all.

Over the next two years, Seattle will continue fixing our roads and bridges, improving our utilities and parks—creating jobs for 5,000 people. But we can do more. Last week, I announced "Seattle Jobs Forward," a package of local steps to boost our economy and get people employed quickly. Working with the council, we will accelerate road, sidewalk projects and environmental work. We'll even get people good-paying jobs to help restore our urban forests. The reasoning is simple: we need immediate action to put people to work right away.

Another breakthrough took place last November, when voters passed the light rail plan, "Mass Transit Now." One year ago, after the defeat of a Roads and Transit measure, there was little appetite to go back to voters. The skeptics said 2008 wasn't the year for mass transit. But as chairman of the Sound Transit board, I worked with our regional leaders, and organized a grassroots campaign. And voters approved a light rail extension by a margin none of us dared to dream. We won, because voters understand that light rail provides more than an alternative to the freeway. It infuses energy into neighborhoods and creates places where people want to live. Now, by extending light rail to north to Lynnwood, south to Federal Way and across the lake to the east side, we'll create 69,000 jobs over the next 15 years.

Let there be no mistake. After four decades, the debate over mass transit is over. Within a decade and a half: We will finally have a transportation system worthy of this great region.

Next month, we will break ground to extend light rail to the University. This segment will create about 2,900 direct jobs and connect three neighborhoods: the UW, Capitol Hill and downtown. Trains will run every 7 minutes initially and eventually every 3 1/2 minutes. Imagine catching a train on Capitol Hill near Seattle Central Community College and arriving in either downtown or the UW in just 3 minutes. That will happen in just a few short years as will a new streetcar line that will connect Capitol Hill, First Hill and the ID.

Strong families, healthy communities

Difficult economic times present a real challenge for city government. Falling revenues put pressure on our budget, just as people need our assistance more than ever.

This coming year, we will spend about $40 million to help the homeless—more than all other cities in Washington State combined. When I became Mayor, I vowed to take a new approach, to make a real attempt to break the cycle of homelessness.

This fall, I'm going to ask Seattle voters to join me again and reach out to those who need a home or are struggling to pay their rent or mortgage. Four times, beginning in 1981, our residents have supported housing assistance. We must do so again. Consider what we accomplished with the last housing levy: Every year, we've given emergency rental assistance to more than 500 households. We've created and preserved more than 1,800 affordable rental units. And we've helped more than 200 first-time homebuyers. I know we face tough times, but I am confident that this fall, Seattle voters will once again step up to help our neighbors keep a roof over their heads.

Our "Homes Within Reach" program encourages builders to create units for workers making below the median income. And we're telling developers: If you want permission to build taller buildings, you have to set aside units that are affordable to our workforce, or provide other benefits to the community. I want to thank Councilmembers Clark and McIver for helping us making sure Seattle remains affordable.

SEATTLE 3RD MOST DESIRABLE PLACE TO LIVE

NWREPORTER MARCH 2009

Seattle ranked third – behind Denver and San Diego – as a place Americans most want to live, according to a new national survey. Conversely, when asked about specific metropolitan areas where they would like to live, respondents ranked Detroit, Cleveland and Cincinnati at the bottom. (See boxes.)

WHERE AMERICANS WANT TO LIVE (TOP 10)

	WOULD LIKE	WOULD NOT LIKE
DENVER	43	55
SAN DIEGO	40	59
SEATTLE	38	60
ORLANDO	34	65

SAN FRANCISCO	34	65

	WOULD LIKE	WOULD NOT LIKE
PHOENIX	33	64
PORTLAND	31	66
SACRAMENTO	29	69
SAN ANTONIO	29	68

Ranked by percentage that say they would like to live in each city. Percentage with no opinion not shown.

WHERE AMERICANS DON'T WANT TO LIVE (BOTTOM 9)

DETROIT	8	90
CLEVELAND	10	88
CINCINNATI	13	84
MINNEAPOLIS	16	82
KANSAS CITY	15	81
PITTSBURGH	17	80
SAINT LOUIS	18	79
LOS ANGELES	21	78
BALTIMORE	20	77

Ranked by percentage that say they would not like to live in each city. Percentage with no opinion not shown.

Among adults with family incomes below $30,000, four in ten (41%) say they would like to live in Seattle. Orlando, a city that isn't among the top 10 among wealthier Americans, also finished high on the list.

Seattle is a preferred city among college grads, as well as among those with no more than a high school diploma.

OTHER SURVEY FINDINGS INCLUDE:

- Americans are all over the map in their views about their ideal community type: 30% say they would most like to live in a small town, 25% in a suburb, 23% in a city and 21% in a rural area.
- By a ratio of three-to-one, Americans prefer living where the pace of life is slow, not fast. A similarly lopsided majority prefers a place where neighbors know each other well to one where neighbors don't generally know each other's business.
- By about two-to-one, they prefer to live in a hot-weather place over a cold-weather place.
- On the fast food front, a slight plurality would rather live in a place with more McDonalds (43%) than one with more Starbucks (35%).
- About seven-in-ten whites rate their current community as "excellent" or "very good"; only about half of Hispanics and four-in-ten blacks say the same. Rural and suburban residents rate their communities better than do residents of cities or small towns.
- People who live in a city – as well as people who want to live in a city – are more open than others to the idea of living with neighbors who are of different races. They are also more open to living among immigrants.
- Regardless of political party or ideology, more than six-in-10 Americans say they would prefer to live in a politically diverse community, although some differences do emerge.
- When it comes to community involvement, there is no difference among those who live in cities, suburbs, small towns or rural areas. About half of the residents in each place say they are involved, and half say they aren't.

An earlier report based on other questions from the same survey found that nearly
