CALL TO ARTISTS

SEATTLE — Seattle's Office of Arts & Cultural Affairs, in partnership with Seattle Parks and Recreation and Seattle Public Utilities (SPU), seeks two artists for public art projects at two new parks -Maple Leaf Reservoir Park and West Seattle Reservoir at Westcrest Park. The artists will be selected from a single pool of applicants, and each will work on one of the park projects.

SPU is replacing its open reservoirs with underground structures to improve the quality and security of Seattle's water supply and provide 76 acres of new open space. SPU is currently covering the two remaining reservoirs—Maple Leaf and West Seattle. After SPU's work is complete, the parks department will transform the open space into new parks.

The selected artists for the park projects will collaborate with design consultants and city staff to create engaging areas or installations that are integrated into the parks' design, enhance the experience of visiting the parks, promote discovery and/or define a space or activity within the parks. The timeline for artwork development will follow the design and construction schedule of the park projects. Construction for the West Seattle Reservoir will begin in March 2011 with completion by May 2012. Construction for the Maple Leaf Reservoir Park will begin in spring 2012 with completion by spring 2013.

The call is open to professional artists residing in the United States. The project budget for each project is $150,000, all-inclusive of travel expenses, taxes and other project costs.

The development of the Maple Leaf and West Seattle reservoir parks is funded through the 2008 Parks and Green Spaces Levy. The Parks and Green Spaces Levy is a six-year levy approved by Seattle voters in November 2008. The levy provides $146 million for land acquisition, community-initiated parks projects and projects to create new parks and improve existing ones. Parks development projects include improved playfields, reservoir lid parks, forest and stream restoration, community gardens and renovated playgrounds throughout Seattle.

NEW HUD BOOKLET HELPS CONSUMERS SHOP FOR MORTGAGES

House hunters can arm themselves with a comprehensive new booklet from the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) to help them shop for the mortgage that best meets their needs.

The 49-page booklet outlines the various stages of the home buying process and helps prospective owners decide if they are ready to buy a home and determine how much home they can afford. The booklet also explains interest rates, points, balloon payments and how prepayment penalties can affect monthly payments.

One section of the booklet discusses the loan after settlement, including how to resolve loan servicing problems with a lender, and steps to take to avoid foreclosure.

Readers will also learn about the sales agreement, how to use HUD's new standard Good Faith Estimate to shop for the best loan, required settlement services, and the HUD-1 Settlement Statement they will receive at closing.

Along with a Glossary of Terms, the booklet includes contact information for consumers who have questions after reading the booklet.

The booklet, available in English or Spanish, may be downloaded as a Word document or PDF at the HUD site, <http://www.hud.gov/offices/hsg/ramh/res/sfhrestc.cfm>.

CITY PROPOSES LOCAL, FEDERALLY-OWNED FACILITIES FOR NOAA

SEATTLE – Seattle's elected leadership, with support from the maritime industry and neighborhood leaders, has forwarded a proposal to the Department of Commerce to retain NOAA's Marine Operations Center-Pacific in Seattle. In a letter sent today to U.S. Commerce Secretary Gary Locke and Under Secretary Jane Lubchenco, Mayor Mike McGinn and the Seattle City Council argued that consolidating NOAA's operations in Seattle at existing federal facilities is the best option for NOAA to achieve its mission and the best deal for federal taxpayers.

"The Department of Commerce should carefully consider this proposal," Mayor McGinn said. "Our local maritime industry, elected officials and neighborhood leaders have all worked together, forwarding a new solution that could keep a great organization and valuable jobs in Seattle."

The proposal is the latest effort of a years-long program, led by the city, to retain the marine center in Seattle, where it has made its home for more than 50 years. In August, NOAA announced its decision to move from Seattle, awarding a 20-year lease to the Port of Newport, Ore. That decision was appealed to the Government Accountability Office (GAO) and sustained because NOAA violated its own solicitation rules by proposing a facility in a floodplain.

"Our proposal gives NOAA the chance to build on its rich history with Seattle, and it further realizes the vision of Senator Warren Magnuson to establish a true NOAA regional center at Sandpoint. This not only a good opportunity for Seattle, it's good for the region," said Councilmember Jean Godden.

The City of Seattle proposal requests that the Department of Commerce and NOAA include the Western Regional Center at Sand Point and Federal Center South in their evaluation of potential sites that are not located in a floodplain. The city's proposal meets GAO's guidance and would save tens of millions of taxpayer dollars.

"The Laurelhurst Community Club has worked for over two years to keep NOAA's marine operations in Seattle," said Jeannie Hale, president of the Laurelhurst Community Club. "NOAA has been a good neighbor. NOAA benefits from Seattle's thriving maritime community, access to research partners, and an exceptional quality of life for its employees. No other location can compete with all Seattle has to offer. We appreciate the work of the Mayor and City Council to make this happen."

Retaining the marine center in Seattle would preserve approximately 1,200 well paid direct and indirect jobs and $180 million in economic activity in the area.

"Our company employs many skilled tradesmen, members of the International Association of Machinist Local 160. We support any effort to keep NOAA in Seattle. If they leave, it would have a devastating impact on our employees and their families," said Jason Walker, owner of Federal Marine and Defense Services in Seattle and Tacoma.

MAYOR MIKE MCGINN'S STATEMENT ON CITY GUN LAW RULING

SEATTLE – Mayor Mike McGinn issued the following statement:

"I am disappointed in today's ruling. Cities should have the right to restrict guns in playgrounds, pools and community centers where children are present. The court's ruling was based on a state law, RCW 9.41.290, which pre-empted Seattle from regulating the possession of firearms. It's time for the state Legislature to change that law.

SEATTLE CITY COUNCIL ANNOUNCES 2010 PRIORITIES

Major emphasis on the economy, education and energy

SEATTLE –The Seattle City Council today announced their vision for Seattle and key efforts for 2010. The Council developed these priorities to support building a livable city, foster safe, just and healthy communities and invest public resources fairly and effectively.

The council highlighted their priorities in a full council session, placing particular emphasis on economic recovery, transportation choices, smart land use and development, clean energy and carbon neutrality, and education.

"These priorities reflect our commitment to the people of Seattle. Residents need to know what specific initiatives we plan to work on and what the Council should be helped accountable for accomplishing," said Council President Richard Conlin.

Conlin added, "Economic recovery is at the head of our list. We know that getting people job training and jobs and getting business activity back on track are imperative for our community and for everything else we do as a City – including our key task of putting together a budget that is balanced and meets the needs of our citizens."

Councilmember Tim Burgess, chair of the Council's Public Safety and Education Committee, said the City's relationship with the Seattle Public Schools would be a major area of focus this year. Burgess explained that the Council would begin consideration of renewal of the Families and Education Levy nearly a year earlier than in previous renewal cycles because of continued low high school graduation rates.

"The fact is that more than one-third of our students are not graduating from high school and this failure has gone on for years. It's time we take bold steps to change our school results. The long term success of our city is inextricably linked to the success of our public schools," said Councilmember Burgess.

Councilmember Bruce Harrell said today, "Our priorities recognize that all people matter, irrespective of socio-economic status or background. Our energy policies, conservation strategies and technology initiatives are designed to improve the circumstances for our residents and businesses and bring about sustainable change."

"In tough economic times it's important to keep our heads up and look for ways to be poised for the next growth cycle. Healthy cities are always growing," said Councilmember Sally J. Clark. "City government can help by updating our land-use laws to reflect the goals of the 21st century. This year Council will look at the neighborhoods in South Downtown and our multi-family code. Our plan is to help these parts of the city grow the way they want to."

Councilmember Mike O'Brien stated, "Addressing climate changes is the most pressing moral issue we face as a society. Seattle has an opportunity to shape what a carbon neutral society can look like in a way that is both economically sustainable and socially just."

"We have a long list of projects that need our attention and our focus should be on fostering relationships so we can get these things done! We are a much greater force when we work together," Councilmember Sally Bagshaw added this afternoon. "Participation is crucial to this effort, and we'll be striving to reach out to our neighborhoods, businesses, labor, environmentalists, and the many groups that are such assets to our city. It's no longer about us versus them; it is about us, all of us."

"Seattle is at a unique point in its history," Councilmember Tom Rasmussen said. "It is time to break ground and to build the projects that we have debated so long, to rebuild public confidence in the leadership of the Seattle Department of Transportation and to plan to meet the ever increasing demands for more sidewalks, bikeways and public transportation."

"As Budget Chair, I will look to these priorities to guide our discussion and make decisions. These are tough times, but by working together we will be able to make smart choices, keep our local business climate strong, and still protect vital services," said Councilmember Jean Godden.
